WHAT THE HOUSE OF COMMONS CAN DO. It is wonderful, when it sets about it, what the House of Commons can get through in the space of six hours. It can read a third time and pass six private Bills about gas, roads, and railways. It can receive petitions about various measures so numerous that we cannot attempt to count or inalyse them. It can question the Government, about Irish elections, trade licences, examina. tions, the Dean and Chapter of Westminster, Poplar distress, the Duke of Wellington's monument, and turnpike trusts. It can dicuss and decide ipon four instructions to its own committee one of which was supposed a few hours beforehand to be equivalent to a vote of non-confidence in the Ministry, with, by way of interlude, a fierce little speech about Irish electionsering factics. It can listen tranquilly, with occasional bursts of laughter; to the amenities of thrust and parry indulged in by such lively orators as Mr. Osborno and Mr. Lowe and such pressic gentlemen as
